Can you three way call on android. How do you 3 way call on android. How do you do a three-way call on an android phone. How do you do a 3 way call on android phone.

It varies by phone. Many newer phones using HD Voice can have up to 6 callers on a conference call. If your phone is capable, repeat steps b - d above to add more people to your call. Older phones can only have 3 callers on a conference call. Note: If you don't have unlimited minutes on your plan, airtime and other charges apply for all calls (e.g., if you have 3 other people on your conference call and talk for 10 minutes, you'll be billed for 30 minutes). With the development of technology, an increasing number of jobs can be done remotely. Since much business can be accomplished offsite, it has become more important than ever to be able to communicate effectively regardless of location. Smartphones allow you to conduct a formal conference call any time, any place. In this article, we will discuss what a conference call is, when and how to participate using a mobile device and how to keep it professional. What is a conference call? A conference call is when three or more people are in a phone conversation simultaneously. Most mobile devices allow up to five or six conference call participants at a time, but there are paid and free hosting sites that can accommodate many more participants. The purpose of a conference call is to allow individuals to conduct a meeting while in different locations or time zones. Preparing for a conference call Before initiating a conference call on a mobile device, consider these points: How many people will be on the call? If it's more than five people, you should consider using a landline or hosting company. Some telecommunications software allows up to 50 people on one conference call. If it's possible to use a landline, landlines offer better sound quality and often a more stable environment, which is key during formal calls. Additionally, there's more software available that allows landlines to handle larger-scale conference calls. If you need to utilize video, sometimes audio will be insufficient to effectively communicate. If you need more than sound, you should consider using a hosting site that allows video conference calling. However, a way around this is to simply share any files or information necessary for the call with the participants beforehand, and request that they have it in front of them during the meeting. How to make a conference call on an iPhone Conference calling on an iPhone is quite simple. As a two-line phone, it can support up to five participants in a conference call, as well as another call on the other line. To create a conference call: Make a call. Press "Add Call," and select the second recipient. The first recipient will be placed on hold while you connect. Press "Merge Calls" to connect both lines together. Repeat steps two and three to add more participants. The iPhone offers a few more key features for conference calls. If you wish to disconnect one of the parties from the call, simply press "Conference" and then tap the red circle with the phone graphic next to the number. You can then press "End Call" to disconnect. You can also conduct private conversations with individuals during a conference call by pressing "Conference," and then "Private" next to the number you'd like to go one-on-one with. When you're ready to rejoin the other parties, press "Merge Calls" and you'll be a part of the conference once more. How to make a conference call on an Android Conducting a conference call on an Android is very similar to an iPhone. The major difference is the terminology and icons. To create a conference call on an Android: Make a call. After connecting, press the "Add Call" icon. The graphic features a person with a "+" next to it. Once the icon is pressed, the first recipient will be placed on hold. Dial the second party, and wait for them to answer. Press the "Merge" icon. This will appear as two arrows merging into one. Once you tap this, the calls will join, and the screen will say "Conference Call." Similar to the iPhone, you can press "Manage" to mute or disconnect a party from the conference call. Conference call etiquette Just as you would dress up for a business meeting, it's important to present yourself in a professional and formal manner in a conference call. Here are a few things to keep in mind: Be prepared. In business, early is on time. Make sure you're logged in, set up and prepared to discuss the topics at hand before the call's scheduled time. If you're using a hosting site or app for the conference call, test the bridge beforehand to make sure that everything is running properly. Choose a quiet location with a strong signal. Take the time and care to find a spot that is free from noise and interference so everyone on the call can participate effectively. Additionally, a headset can be an effective tool for eliminating ambient noise. Make sure your location has a strong signal. If it appears unstable, consider changing locations. Make sure your phone is fully charged beforehand if possible, have a charger and outlet nearby just in case. Turn off your ringer. Be sure to cut out any unnecessary distractions by switching your phone and laptop to silent before your call. Avoid using speakerphone. Though it allows you to be more hands-free, it sacrifices sound quality. Try using a headset instead, unless you're sharing a phone line with another person. Stay focused. Most smartphones allow you to perform other tasks during a phone call. Resist temptation. The other participants can't see you, but you still need to be present. Conference calls are the staple of any team, remote or on-site. They're quick and convenient for everyone involved, especially when there isn't any screen sharing involved (and you don't have the time to set up an elaborate video meeting). There are tons of ways to set up conference calling, including using dial-ins from a landline. You probably already know about the dozens of conference call services out there, or already use the in-built conference calling feature in your uber-versatile mobile device. But that method has its limitations—we'll go into that later. There's a better way, and that's the RingCentral app. Are you set up with the right headset for your next conference call? What should you look out for when shopping for a new conference call headset? In this article, we'll cover a few options for making a conference call on an Android device. Skip ahead if you're interested in a certain section: But first... A better way to make conference calls on Android Before we get into the steps to make a conference call on an Android device, you can use your Android's built-in features, but there's an even better solution if you're running a business. It's a mobile app—or more specifically, the RingCentral app. The RingCentral app is built for making life easier at work, and the conference calling tool comes packed with team collaboration features that are designed to make your conference calls and phone calls more productive. All you need is a RingCentral Office subscription, which starts at $19.99 per month. Once you have that, you're good to go—no need for team members to dial in, just download the desktop and mobile app to make a phone call, send a message, host an online meeting—or set up video conferencing—in real time. Plus: You can make free conference calls. You don't have to pay your mobile service provider's charges for local or international calls since your RingCentral Office subscription covers all your conference calling charges. (Being able to make a free conference call is a biggie if you have remote teammates or clients in other countries.) Other than just audio or teleconferencing, the RingCentral app also lets you do video conferencing, team messaging, screen sharing, and more—all from the same app. Instead of having to dial in participants one by one, you can provide a single conference bridge phone number or send out a link and an access code through email or text using your dialpad. This saves tons of time. You can enable teleconferencing for up to 1,000 attendees using their IP desk phones (and speakerphones) while in the office, or the RingCentral desktop app on your computer, or even the RingCentral mobile app while on the go. Yep, you've got options. And more... How to make a conference call on Android using the RingCentral app Step 1: Download the RingCentral app Step 1: Download the RingCentral app from the Google Play Store. Here's the link. Once it's downloaded, create a new account or sign in if you already have an account. Step 2: Choose a few contacts from your directory to start a conference call with. Method 1: Choose a few contacts from your directory to start a conference call with. Just tap the + icon and you should see a "New Conference" option. That's it! You can add contacts to a conference call from there. Method 2: You can also turn a regular call into a conference call by tapping "Add" to include more contacts. There are other useful features too if you tap "More"—you can put someone on hold, transfer them, switch to using your carrier's network instead of using Wi-Fi, even record your call; Step 4: That's it! Just choose someone to add to your conference call. Pro-tip: Need to share your screen? Just flip it to a video call. You'll notice that there's a Video button on your calling interface—just tap the icon to switch your voice-only conference call to a video conference call. Method 3: Send out the invites to your attendees! Send the conference invitation to your participants via text or email. RingCentral integrates with both Google Calendar and Outlook to create meeting links automatically in the invites: How do I make a conference call on an Android phone? Most (if not all) Android phones have a built-in conference calling feature that you can set up from your call screen. You call up the first person and then merge calls one by one using the other conference attendees' phone numbers. Here's a step-by-step tutorial to show you how you can go about doing this. Pro-tip: Before you begin, you'll want to make sure you have all the attendees of the conference call added to your contact list. Step 1: Call up the first person you want to include in your conference. Step 2: Once the call connects, tap the "Add call" button. The screen will open up to your contacts list. Any member of the two-way call can use the "Add call" button to do this: Step 3: Find the next person you wish to add to your call and select their contact number. Once the call connects, you'll be able to speak with them without the first caller hearing you: Step 4: Tap the "Merge" button. Once you've enabled this feature, all three of you will be able to hear and speak with one another: Step 5: To add more people, repeat the preceding steps. Again, any one of the three callers can do this. End call and hang up by pressing the red phone icon as you normally would. Phew, that can be a lot of steps! Now, this method, while convenient, has its limitations. For instance, the steps involved can be quite tedious when you're trying to conference more than four people or trying to include people in other countries. Also, the cost of making international or out-of-state calls can sometimes be quite high. Conference calling from your Android phone has never been easier. Staying in touch with your team is an essential part of remote working, whether you're working with Android, Samsung, or iPhone and other iOS mobile devices. The quality of your communications has a huge impact on the quality of your team and the work they do. So, when the tedious parts of setting up online meetings, video calls, and conference calls (for example tiresome dial-ins from landlines) are out of the picture, and your team follows proper meeting etiquette, what you're left with is butter-smooth collaboration. And that's what RingCentral was made for. © Originally published Feb 02, 2021, updated Jun 14, 2022 Not quite in-office, not yet a remote-first company? Hybrid work might be in your future.
